

A distribution system provides a ordering system that receives electronic orders and provides order information to corresponding warehouses or suppliers. The goods are supplied to a delivery system that transports the goods to one of the pre-determined delivery points for pickup by the user. The pre-determined delivery points are arranged with an entity associated with the location of the delivery point, and are selected based on buying characteristics of the people near the site.

[illegible]